They were designed to be experimental in their construction, and afforded means for a comparative test of various methods of building, glazing and ventilating, and of the relative merits of steam and hot water for greenhouse heating. When the houses had been used one season, a bulletin was issued, in which the construction was described, and the merits or demerits of the methods used were pointed out. During the winter a test of the heating systems was made, and the results were given in the same bulletin. The report was widely distributed, and was copied in full by many horticultural and engineering periodicals, while others gave it favorable notices, which led hundreds of prospective builders of greenhouses, in all parts of the country, to apply for copies, and made a second edition necessary. From nearly...
