The plants that will be referred to and which render gardens so attractive during the summer are familiarly known as Geraniums. With the object of making the matter clear to amateurs, it may be stated that every socalled Geranium that requires to be kept from frost is a Pelargonium, no matter what the colour of the flowers and foliage may be. True Geraniums are hardy border plants that pass the winter without any protection whatever. Pelargoniums are called Zonals because there is a more or less distinct horseshoe-shaped zone of colour in the leaf. In some it is very conspicuous indeed, constituting the chief attraction of the plants, notably in the variegated golden and silver tricolor and bicolor varieties, these terms signifying two and three colours in...
